arXiv Business Planning Update

July 2010

Since announcing our collaborative business model in January 2010, we have secured pledges from 85 institutions, totaling to $302,000 in contributions. We have been encouraged with the international support that represents Australia, Canada, China, Germany, India, Israel, Japan, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States. The Joint Information Systems Committee (JISC) Collections has facilitated the coordination of contributions from the UK academic community and we are in the process of making a similar arrangement for Germany working with the German National Library of Science and Technology (TIB) and the Helmholtz Association (HGF). We are especially interested in increasing our outreach in France and Italy as these countries represent large user groups.

As described in the arXiv business model white paper, our target for CY2010 was $100,000 and we now anticipate reaching our CY 2012 contribution goal by the end of this year. The CY2010 budget reflects the current staffing configuration and anticipated computer and staffing expenses for calendar year 2010. We will post the actual calendar year 2010 spending at the end of the year. We are working on developing a roadmap for upgrading the underlying technology in order to continue innovation through new features as well as achieving cost efficiencies and further reliability through advanced architectural elements.

Complementing these short-term business planning efforts, we formed a Sustainability Advisory Group, which will provide an essential consultative role in developing diverse sustainability strategies for this critical international resource. The charge and composition of the advisory group is posted at:
http://arxiv.org/help/support/sustainability_advisory_group.

Based on requests from several publishers and societies with publications in physics and mathematics, we recently started exploring how to expand our current institutional contribution model to invite support from relevant publishers. We are currently holding conference calls and gathering input from a selected group of publishers to understand how we can include them in our collaborative business modeling process.

More information about our sustainability and business planning efforts is available at

We thank all our supporters and welcome questions and suggestions.
