arXiv Business Planning Update

December 2010

Since announcing our collaborative business model in January 2010, we have secured pledges from 123 institutions, totaling to $360,000 in contributions and representing 11 countries. We are especially grateful for the assistance of the German National Library of Science and Technology (TIB) and the Helmholtz-Alliance Physics at the Terascale in raising the contributions for the universities and to the Helmholtz-Society for raising the contributions for their research centers in Germany for 2010. TIB and the Helmholtz-Society will also coordinate the contributions for the universities and the Helmholtz-Research Centers for 2011-2012.

As part of our sustainability planning, we have taken a critical look at arXiv's technology infrastructure and prepared a high-level plan, which includes a major change to the discovery and access component of the platform. We shared the plan with four external colleagues with expertise in repository architectures in order to solicit their input. We are in the process of gathering feedback to assess the technology plan.

The arXiv Sustainability Advisory Group held its first meeting and discussed a range of issues including the 2011 budget and contribution levels. As described in the arXiv business model white paper, Cornell University Library is committed to fund 15% of the operating budget. Any potential surplus accrued through institutional contributions will be rolled over for future years' budget. We updated the 2010 arXiv budget and also posted a projected budget for 2011. One of our goals for the next year is to track cost elements even closer and expand the in-kind expenses category.

Also included in the arXiv sustainability advisory group agenda were strategies for balancing stability and innovation of the service, collaboration models with publishers and societies in involving them in the business planning process, and usage statistics needs to support the sustainability initiative. We are grateful for the input from the advisory group, which serves an essential consultative role in assisting Cornell develop diverse sustainability strategies.

We thank all our supporters and welcome questions and suggestions.
